George Kern married Charlotte Devinney. Over the years, several family members migrated to Washington and Illinois. Anna moved to Washington in 1837, taking a 14-day boat trip from Pittsburg to Wesley City in Tazewell County, where brother William picked her up and took her to Washington. She and her husband were active in many business ventures around Peoria and central Illinois until his death in 1872. Anna’s brother, William, was in charge of the wagon bridge the winter of 1850-51. In 1851 he moved to Portland Oregon in a journey that lasted 5 months and 3 weeks.

Tidbits – ace Newsletter reporter Larry has informed the Newsletter that his gg grandfather fought in the Civil War battle of Gettysburg at Culp’s Hill. And what surprised us was two unexpected Tidbits – first, his ancestor was from Virginia and fought for the South (and eventually settled in Morgan County Illinois) and second, Larry still has his gg grandfather’s rifle from that battle!!! For Civil War enthusiasts, it’s a full stock percussion Kentucky rifle, 36 caliber. He also has his ball mold and the powder horn. Amazing!!

WAS STEVENSON A COPPERHEAD?

Stevenson Around Age 30

“It was reported one day during the meeting of the Democratic convention which nominated Grover Cleveland for the second term that his running mate was a man by the name of Adlai E. Stevenson from Bloomington. Several of the older inhabitants recalled that Stevenson had practiced law in Metamora during the Civil War. Sure enough when our weekly paper arrived a few days later, there was a picture of Stevenson, which Aunt Mary said “looks just like him,” and an account of his early law practice in our town.

“Sometime later in the campaign the paper, which was a staunch Republican paper, printed a long article charging Stevenson with Pro-Southern sympathies during the war. The article included an interview with a number of our Republican citizens who testified that the vice-presidential candidate had been a copperhead in those trying times, and that he even organized a company of copperheads in the community. One of the men testified that on the day following the assassination of President Lincoln, Stevenson, coming into Rohman’s grocery store, remarked that the death of Lincoln was the most fortunate event for the country since the war begun.

“The attempt of Stevenson's former townsmen to discredit him eventually had little effect, for he easily elected vice president on the Cleveland ticket. If he ever saw the newspaper article, and likely he did, he must soon have forgotten it; for some years later, after he had become known to fame, he honored the scene of his maiden efforts as a struggling lawyer with a visit, as an orator of the day and the honored the guest of the village.”
